Visiting Assistant Professor of Emerging Media

Media Arts & Culture Department

POSITION SUMMARY

Occidental College’s Media Arts & Culture Department (MAC) seeks a Visiting Assistant Professor of Emerging Media for a 1-year full-time, terminal appointment.

The successful candidate would be a critically-engaged scholar/practitioner with demonstrated teaching/mentoring abilities and a compelling body of project and/or publication-based research that advances the creative and cultural possibilities of emergent media forms. Given the rapid pace of technological change, we leave the definition of emergent media intentionally broad, but areas of emphasis might include: VR/AR (virtual reality, augmented reality, immersive media), speculative design and worldbuilding, animation, game studies and design, transmedia storytelling, and interactive and computational media forms.

We seek a candidate who can envision the liberal arts context as a space to both imagine and critique emergent media practices through both theory and practice, grounding new forms within larger histories, ethical frameworks, and/or questions of access, agency, and activism. We are particularly interested in exploring ways that emergent media can expand the diversity of perspectives, identities, and voices represented through media and how these experiences and stories can reach and engage audiences. The ideal candidate can offer courses that integrate technical emerging media practices in ways that are accessible to both production and critical media track students. Their creative media work might engage with issues of social justice, health, inclusion and representation, gender, sexual, or racial identity, and/or the environment.

The position entails teaching a 3/2 5-course course which might include one of our gateway courses—Introduction to Digital Media and Culture; Introduction to Visual and Critical Studies; and Aesthetics of Cinema—and electives in the candidate’s area of interest, listed under such thematic headings as: Topics in Emerging Media, Topics in Animation & Visual Effects, Topics in Digital Culture, and/or Topics in Media Theory and Practice. In addition to these courses, the position also requires curating a semester of the MAC Cinematheque Screening event series.

Our ideal candidate will help us continue developing and supporting a signature approach to media arts and cultural studies that leverages Occidental’s location in Los Angeles and manifests our commitments to local/global dialogues, community-based learning, undergraduate research, co-curricular curation and exhibition, and social justice.

An advanced terminal degree (Ph.D., M.F.A., or equivalent) in media studies or media practices is required at the time of appointment.
